Mountains to Sound Greenway web site URL: www.mtsgreenway.org

Thank you for support of the Mountains to Sound Greenway Education Program with your generous grant in 2013. Your ongoing support is a wonderful testament to your commitment to education in our region and the strength of this outdoor education program.

The Tulalip Tribe is making science education and ecological stewardship possible for students and teachers in the Mountains to Sound Greenway. By teaching children in a natural environment, we help foster their love of the outdoors, thereby creating future stewards of our forests, streams and mountains.

- The Greenway Education Program's Stewardship Extension: Students participating in the Greenway Education program had the opportunity to participate in a volunteer ecological stewardship event as a capstone to classroom work and field study. Participants funded by this grant: 125 students
- Stewardship at School: Working with local schools, the Greenway Trust built environmental curriculum around a stewardship project near to school property. Participants funded by this grant: 25 students plus 6 adult volunteers

Thanks to you, students take a scientific journey through the woods to learn how a healthy environment provides clean air, clean water, wildlife habitat, recreation, and the opportunity for people to connect with nature.

As we seek to officially designate the Greenway as a National Heritage Area, environmental education across the landscape will continue to be absolutely essential. In our region, as we collectively strive to prepare students for careers in science, technology, engineering and math, we can play a key role in advancing education about our natural world.

Sincerely,

Cynthia Welti
